 Kay JayGee Hey Rich. I understand where doc is coming from, but I do believe he's missed some things and quite misunderstood some things. I've been holding my tongue on this for a while, seeing who would chime in and what they would say, but I might need to chim... See More

Frankly, as a bible believing and following christian, I find this entire discussion repulsive. I am finding out how many around me are reformed by tradition rather than scripture. It has been very eye opening.

 Luke Walker Rich, I love what you and Dr White do at AO. Listening to the DL is one of the things I really look forward to every week.

There are lots of repulsive things being said. It's sickening to see so many who clearly never listen Dr White all of a sudden showing a keen interest in throwing fierce rebukes upon him. But not all that's being said is repulsive and not all who are speaking up are spewing vitriol at him.

Reformed African American Christians aren't talking about something that happened 150 years ago that has no bearing on the real life experience of so many people of color today. Segregation, white flight, the creation of black inner city conditions, the consistent media portrayal of young black men, and the refusal of Conservative seminaries to admit black students are things that historically speaking happened yesterday and have massive bearing on society and the American church today.

I'm praying that the Lord will show this to Dr White. Perhaps after the dust settles.

I still for my part hold you all in high regard and will continue to listen to and be blessed by the material you put out.

Kay JayGee Well, if you were reformed by scripture, you'd be presbyterian Rich. (joking...only somewhat...LOL)

Luke has a very strong point that you may want to give heavy consideration to. And my response that I began typing is turning into the blogpost I was going to write anyway, so I'm going to transfer it to Wordpress. I'll tag you and Doc on it in a bit.

Kay JayGee OR.... instead of listening to respond, you could listen to understand. The latter may be a wiser move, imo.

Rich Pierce · Friends with Eddie Exposito and 10 others Did you think that the phrase "ethnic gnosticism" was just a cute buzzphrase? It isn't. We are taking this matter very seriously and see it as men violating Galatians 3:28 directly.

Kay JayGee I actually think your phrase "ethnic gnosticism" is completely unwarranted, as no one has said that "unless you're black you won't understand". I think you've used that and Gal. 3:28 to avoid and dismiss criticism. Truthfully, the phrase has done more to inflame

What I do think is that Dr. White has shown more care in dealing with how Muslims are spoken to as well as how Mormons are spoken to than how he spoke about the young black teen in his original post. He's also spoken less softly, patiently and graciously (and I think I can lump you into that crowd as well) about those you've disagreed with who are critical than you would to a Muslim or Mormon. Are you out to prove you are right or to find a basis to build bridges with your African-American brothers and sisters ?

And by the way, I'm an ordained deacon in the PCA. Scott Allen Bridges is my pastor. He's been busy, but he's been reading.

Hermonta Godwin Why is there an assumption that one has not really listened if one disagrees? Kerry you made a Presby reference. Do you believe that the only way to be a Baptist is if one does not listen honestly to Presby arguments? If not then why does such thinking not influence your stance here.

Hermonta Godwin Well let us look at the OP. If honest disagreement is possible what does the point of minorities are here to stay make?

Kay JayGee Well....are we dealing with honest disagreement here ? That's the first question.
